

Millions are at risk of coverage loss!

What can MCH professionals do now to support families in the Medicaid redetermination process?

Background

During the pandemic, Medicaid once again demonstrated its vital national safety net role. The federally mandated continuous coverage provision ensured that existing and newly enrolled Medicaid beneficiaries could remain on the program throughout the public health emergency. By early 2023, the national uninsured rate reached an all-time low of 7.7 percent, contributing to extraordinary coverage gains.

Throughout the country, the resumption of the Medicaid renewal process has been chaotic and harmful. There has been a net enrollment decline of over ten million people nationwide, including nearly four million children. More than 70% of the people terminated from Medicaid may still have been eligible, but lost coverage for procedural reasons.

Coverage loss is falling disproportionately on communities that historically have experienced barriers to maintaining coverage (for example, communities of color, people with limited English proficiency, and families impacted by having a child with special health care needs), deepening already severe health inequities.

There is an urgent need for MCH staff and their community partners to take an active role in supporting families in the Medicaid renewal process and mitigating further harm.

The following pages contain actions that state MCH programs can take now.

Ensure that all MCH staff understand, at a basic level, the options for families who lose Medicaid coverage through redetermination.

Most families have the following options:

- 1 Request that coverage be reinstated. If a family member loses coverage for an incomplete renewal (i.e, a procedural reason), they can request that coverage be reinstated. Families typically have 90 days from the date postmarked on the Medicaid agency letter to submit all the necessary information the state needs in order to decide if coverage should be reinstated. The state treats this as a new application.
- 2 File an appeal. All Medicaid beneficiaries have the right to appeal a Medicaid termination decision. Each state determines its own appeals process and timeline. If a family misses the appeal deadline, they may be able to request an extension.

Once an appeal is filed, the Medicaid office will try to resolve the appeal informally. This typically involves collecting more data and may include an interview. If the family is not satisfied with the informal resolution, they have the right to request a hearing.

Families of children with complex medical needs (including those on Medicaid waivers) whose health may be jeopardized by a lengthy appeals process, can request an expedited appeal hearing.
- 3 Reapply for Medicaid. If reinstatement or appeal are no longer options, a family might consider reapplying for Medicaid. This can be done at any time. It's important to note that different individuals within a family - such as infants, children, children with special health care needs, and parents - may have different Medicaid eligibility criteria. CHIP may also be an option, and parents should ask about it if they reapply for Medicaid for their children.
- 4 Enroll in a low-cost health insurance plan. Families losing Medicaid coverage can look into enrolling in a low-cost plan through the Health Insurance Marketplace. Children can stay on their parents' Marketplace coverage until age 26. The Marketplace offers family and child-only policies. There is a Marketplace Special Enrollment Period (SEP) for those who have lost Medicaid coverage due to redetermination. Marketplace-eligible consumers who apply for coverage between March 31, 2023, and July 31, 2024 and can attest that they have lost Medicaid between the same time period will be eligible for the SEP. Consumers then have 60 days after they submit their application to select a plan.

Connect with and refer families to Medicaid redetermination experts in your state.

MCH programs can serve as a bridge between families and community-based experts who can provide assistance with the redetermination process. MCH programs should connect with the following three key partners, who are actively involved in efforts to support individuals and families in the Medicaid renewal process at the state and community levels.

Family-to-Family Information Centers

F2Fs, located in every state, are federally-funded programs that provide technical assistance and peer support to families of children and youth with special health care needs. F2Fs are working closely with families who have been negatively impacted by the redetermination process.

Why are F2Fs an important resource for MCH programs on redetermination?

F2Fs are community-based and can provide state MCH programs with a direct referral link for families needing assistance with the renewal process. F2Fs are also a trusted source for community-level information, which state health departments can consult when assessing the unwinding's impact on families.

Federal navigator grantees

Navigators grantees are state organizations that connect people to Marketplace coverage, including those from communities that historically have experienced lower access to health coverage and greater disparities in health outcomes. The 29 states that use the federally facilitated Marketplace have at least one navigator grantee. States with their own Marketplaces host their own navigator programs.

Why are navigator grantees an important resource for MCH programs on redetermination?

Navigator grantees have specialized training to assess adults and children for Marketplace coverage, as well as Medicaid and CHIP. They serve as the central source of information regarding Marketplace enrollment in all states.

State public interest/advocacy organizations

Most states have at least one such organization, and their work often includes protecting the rights of Medicaid enrollees who have lost coverage. In addition, the national Legal Services Corporation operates a nationwide database of local legal aid organizations that may be able to provide direct assistance to people who have lost or are at risk of losing Medicaid.

Why are public interest/ advocacy organizations an important resource for MCH programs on redetermination?

With the rapid pace of terminations, MCH programs need advocacy support and referral sources for families. These organizations are also a key source for stories of families experiencing coverage loss.

Two recent national policies may affect the redetermination process for certain populations.

One-year Medicaid continuous coverage for kids

Beginning January 1, 2024, all states are required to provide one year of continuous Medicaid coverage to enrolled children up to age 19. From the time a child’s Medicaid coverage is renewed or started, enrolled children are guaranteed coverage for 12 months, regardless of changes in family income.

One-year Medicaid postpartum coverage for women

Most states have adopted the 12-month Medicaid postpartum coverage option. In these states, pregnant people are guaranteed Medicaid coverage for 12 months postpartum, regardless of changes in income. These individuals will undergo the renewal process at the end of the 12-month postpartum period.

Children on waivers

It is important for MCH programs to connect directly with families whose children are enrolled in Medicaid through a home- and community-based waiver or other pathway based on disability.

These families may need additional education and support to maintain their children's critically important Medicaid coverage.
